

She graduated from Malden High, did her student teaching here, worked in the junior highs in the '60's and '70's and returned to the High School in 1981. Her teaching is honest, realistic, and dedicated.

Francine Black and Prop 2½ came to Malden High in the same year. To us, she represents the truth that, no matter how bad the situation, good people will persevere in good works. In dedicating this book to her, we honor all those teachers who did their best against terrible odds.

Cheerleaders Michelle Bucci, Julie Hatch and Nedlam showed their school spirit against the traditional rival- Medford.

return to the original formula

Well, things were finally back to normal around here.

There was a return to the good old days, the way things used to be. We stressed going "back to the basics", to give us all a good, solid education. There was a return to discipline, enabling the teachers to get the material across. After a long lapse, we finally realized the value of our old system.

Things were also returning to the old ways in the world at large. In relationships, caring was back "in", proclaimed TIME magazine. Natural disasters were back, unfortunately. Hurricane Gloria swept through. It seemed all of New England had masking tape on its windows. Natural wonders were back also—Halley's comet returned, after its usual 76-year absence. And hero-worship: movie and television stars, and the Patriots, who made it to the Superbowl.

The Coca-Cola company certainly learned something about traditions. They tried to switch the formula of their product, based on a taste test. "new Coke" prompted a stream of protests, and after about three months of intense pressure the original formula was brought back, under the name of "Classic Coke". But during those three months, even teenagers were speaking of the "good old days".

In general, the return to our old values and traditions (to the "original formula", as it were) was appreciated and respected. It was nice to know that the way things were going was tried-and-true, and made us feel more at ease.

Even though the game was postponed, many fans cheered on the Malden team in the annual football against Medford on the following Saturday.

Seniors Steven Kalman and Cheryl Cardarelli entertained children at the annual Arts and Crafts Fair that was held in November.

Junior Lori Gilman did the customary dance down the aisle in the Jenkins Auditorium at the Pep Rally.

Members of the Quiz Team, Gary Drevitch, Jim Coughlin, Dan DiSano and Peter Gray were tested on their academic skills by Barbara LaPorta.

Peggy Lenehan did the limbo at the Hawaiian style Senior Dinner Dance held at the Moose Hall in early December.

for some there was never time

After finishing five hours of homework, or after coming home from cross country practice, one would think that there would be no life left in a student. But yes, there was such a thing as student life.

Student life was what people did with their free time, whether it was during weeknights or on weekends. Movie lovers could usually be found at either the Showcase Cinema in Revere or the Sack Cinema in Somerville. Both of these places were popular because there was somewhere nearby that people could go to after the movies got out. If people were in Revere, they could take a stroll along Revere beach or go to Kelly's for a quick bite. The Sack was near both Assembly Square and Meadow Glen malls. The malls were popular because they provided a casual atmosphere for meeting friends, shopping, and, of course, eating—but even that got boring.

Some of the more adventuresome students opted to pass up the malls for a trip into Boston. In Boston there were cool places to go like Kenmore Square, Harvard Square, or Newbury Street. Many also went into Boston to go shopping in Downtown Crossing. After all, there was only so much shopping a person could get done in Malden Square.

No matter how a person chose to spend his free time, it was still important. It gave people a break from school. It allowed them to have fun with their individual thoughts, needs, and feelings. That was what made student life such a wonderful thing to take part in.

a government evolves

Student government was basically the same as the other years. The Sophomores, Juniors, and Seniors elected their officers prior to this year and the Freshmen held their first elections this year.

Usually the Freshmen are inexperienced in student government and the elections are nothing more than a popularity contest. This year's Freshmen proved this belief to be wrong. The class officers worked very hard along with their advisor Mr. Don Brunelli to make it a very successful Freshman year.

New to Malden High School was the Student Council. Along with Mr. Tom O'Donnell, Gary Drevitch, and Gary Christenson helped put it into effect. This council aimed to give the students a voice in controversial issues, to work with the School Committee and Faculty Senate.

The Seniors also tried something new. Instead of electing homeroom representatives, they had a Senior Council. There was undying participation. The council along with the officers discussed and planned all major class events.

The Juniors and Sophomores also had a successful year. Junior Varieties greatness was based mostly on the Juniors' ability to plan and carry out ideas. The sophomores held a very successful dance that a lot of members of all four classes attended.

The success of all the Student Governments led to a prodigiously consummate year for all classes at Malden High.

Because of Senior Class Advisor Christine MacKay's absence, sometimes Debra Moretti had to relay messages to the Senior Council.

The popular game of grabbing for doughnuts was played by the children of members of YMCA at a Halloween party given by the National Honor Society.

Students in the Junior class delivered and received dozens of red, pink, and white carnations on Valentine's Day.

Members of the Key Club donned costumes and entertained tots at Kidstop daycare center at their annual Halloween party.

Jennifer King, Claire Kelliher, and Anita Slayton were among the hundreds of students participating in one of the three fundraisers on Valentine's Day.

holidays for sharing

If one were to ask an adult to list the holidays in order of importance, guaranteed Halloween and Valentine's Day would come at the end of the list. Not so for most teens. While Halloween gave kids of all ages the opportunity to dress up, tell ghost stories and collect candy, Valentine's Day was the one holiday that youths shared with their boyfriends and girlfriends, and gave everyone a chance to give cards, flowers, and candy to those they cared about most. Both holidays gave us a chance to celebrate, and celebrate we did.

On October 31, the Junior class sponsored a Halloween dance, for which a good part of the turn out dressed up. Some of the more original costumes included Ronald Reagan, Little Red Riding Hood, The Big Bad Wolf, Moses, Elvira, mistress of the dark, Prince, and a bag of potato chips. Just about everyone had a good time.

The freshman class planned a Valentine's Day dance, but unfortunately it had to be cancelled due to unforeseen circumstances.

However, the spirit of Valentine's Day was not lost. For weeks preceding Valentine's Day, the Senior, Junior, and Freshman classes sold lollipops, carnations and luv-a-grams, respectively. It was a pleasure for people to walk into their homerooms and collect their items.

Although these holidays are not considered particularly important, adolescent interest in them is not likely to fade. It seems that there is something that appeals to everybody about love and horror.

Gucci pocketbooks, real and fake, were a popular accessory to the outfits of many people.

doing your own thing

Fashion played a large role in school life. Each student had his own original style. Labels such as "prep", "punk", "geek", and "trendy" were often used to describe clothes, but these labels were rarely used to describe the person.

Paisley prints were just about everywhere. This unique shape was found on stirrup pants, sweaters, shirts, socks, and scarves. Floral prints in the boldest colors also made quite a statement.

In shoes, the most popular was Reeboks, whether black hightops or white aerobic shoes. Lace-up shoes, cowboy boots, penny loafers, and spikes were an important part of fashion. Usually, the shoes were worn with colored socks and nylons.

Large corporations such as Polo, Gucci, Benetton, ESPRIT received "free" advertisement by designing rugby shirts and sweatshirts which prominently displayed their logo.

A great variety of hairstyles was seen. More and more people showed their scalps with the help of shaving. The popular ducktail of the 50's and 60's, along with wiffles, were back. Many girls defied the laws of gravity by training their hair to stand straight up with helpful tools such as gel, mousse, and hairspray.

Overall, the students showed just how creative they were by wearing the most outrageous outfits imaginable. Individuality was shown even by those people whom everyone had always considered shy and quiet.

Juniors Michelle Horkan and Jim Jordan model the untucked shirt look along with wild boots and shoes.

an artful, crafty affair

On Saturday, November 23, we held our annual Craft Fair which has been a tradition since 1982. This tradition was first started by the class of 1984, during their sophomore year. It has brought great success and profit to every class that has sponsored it. When Mr. Duffy was asked about the amount of money that the class of 1986 had made on this year's Craft Fair, he just smiled and said, "We have accomplished all of our financial goals."

A variety of crafts were offered at the fair, and most of them were handmade. The crafts were sold at tables which were rented for fifteen dollars each. The money that came in from the tables being rented went to the sponsoring class, while the money made at each table belonged to the individuals who sold the crafts.

The Craft Fair wasn't just an opportunity for the Senior class to make money but for the Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior classes as well. If they wanted to, they could have rented a table and sold something to support their own class. The girls' basketball team had a small section of their own; anyone who wanted their picture taken with Nedlam, our school mascot, could have it taken for one dollar.

The Craft Fair was not just a fundraiser, but a place for people to enjoy themselves for the day. Everyone who attended appreciated the effort put forth by the participants. It gave students a chance to express their own creativity, and to enjoy the artistic works of others.

Mr. Duffy holds the bucket filled with names of anxious people who are waiting to see who is going to win the raffle.

Cheryl Cardarelli and Steven Kalman walk around the fair dressed as clowns livening the spirits and entertaining all who attended.

The chorus put in many hours of hard work to perfect their portion of the Junior Varieties Show: "Anchor's Away."

preparing for varieties

Once again, after February vacation, announcements could be heard over the intercom concerning it. Music could be heard from Jenkins Auditorium, and talk about the show was on nearly everyone's lips. Members of the Junior class were busy putting together the annual Junior Varieties show.

As in previous shows, it took hours of planning and preparation to put it together. The first thing that had to be taken care of was the auditions. Many students from different grade levels nervously tried out for a spot in the show. The lucky and talented few that were picked then had to attend the weekly practices. Some were at practice every night, either planning how they could make their own act better or just watching the other acts.

Once the acts were in order, the Script and Theme Committee set to work on a script that would be innovative, entertaining, and pertaining to the U.S.O. theme that had previously been settled on. The committee spent so many hours after school trying to think of unique introductions that by the end of each afternoon they were fighting off insanity.

After the script was written, there was a rush to get the announcers and chorus people familiar with the format of the show. They also had to learn their lines. All this in two weeks! Then there was the entire chorus to worry about.

No matter what committee students worked on, they had to dedicate many hours of their time to help pull the show together.

Peter Saulnier and Dave Ollis waved goodbye after rehearsing their "Blues Brothers" act singing "Soul Man."

The red, white and blue Pepsi machines lured thirsty students who craved refreshing carbonated drinks instead of milk or juice.

Instant coffee machines were a common sight throughout the school. They could be found in the teachers' lounge and at the backs of rooms.

One privilege that certain students enjoyed was the designated smoking area. It was initially formed to stop the smoking in the bathroom.

Teachers and administrators were commonly seen with walkie-talkies in their hands. The walkie-talkies were used as a second phone.

when I was a kid . . .

"Let me tell you about things back in my day. Why, when I was a kid . . ."

Nearly all high school students must have heard a line like that sometime during their lives, whether from a teacher or a parent. Upon hearing such a comment, most students thought to themselves, "Oh, no, here we go again." But if they had listened, they would have realized that things were definitely different twenty of twenty-five years ago.

People that came back to Malden High to reminisce about their former days probably wouldn't remember eating in the cafeteria. One reason for this was that there was no cafeteria. Students ate out for lunch—in the square, at home, wherever.

Something else that visiting parents would have noticed were the walkie-talkies that the teachers and administrators carried around with them. To an outsider, these people who walked the halls may have seemed like wardens at a prison, but they were just making sure that things were running smoothly. The walkie-talkies were more like extra phones, rather than secret weapons used to capture students.

Though the high school was more modernized, it had lost some of the ambiance that the original buildings contained. The desks and walls were not made out of materials such as formica and concrete, which was a great contrast to the beautiful oak that once covered the walls and floors.

Although the school may have changed over the years, there will always be teachers, education, and students to be educated.

The production put on by the Greenroom this year was Biff and Buffy. Diane DeMarco and Rich Curran portrayed these characters.

Here is a behind the scene look at Greenroom. Under the direction of William Faria the cast learns of new directions they must follow.

An important part of student activities was Green Room. It was beginning to be thought of as an active club, whereas before it kind of got side-shifted. The most notable change that occurred was John O'Brein's retirement as Director. William Faria took over this laborious job.

With this change in direction a new view has come about. When asked where he would like his opinions and ideas to take the drama club, Faria responded with many heretofore unheard of ambitions. He aimed for each student to use his/her own body as a tool. This means mastery, refinement of both verbal and physical expression. He stressed the fact that performing is a discipline, requiring training and a willingness to work.

Green Room's atmosphere is somewhat like that of a family. Cast and crew were equals—everyone worked together. Faria made it clear that it was okay to make mistakes. People supported each other and gave encouragement.

Faria was more concerned about the performer than the performance. He tried to work on people's individual weaknesses and to strengthen their overall acting ability—occasionally at the expense of the plays. All this specialization took up valuable rehearsal time.

This problem gave Faria the hope that perhaps Drama could be taught as a regular course, as it was in many other schools. But no matter how this matter is settled, it appeared that Green Room was heading towards a bright future.

Bob Harris, Kim O'Donnell, Paul Cutone, and Andrea Noah illustrate that Greenroom is not all work and no play as they enjoy themselves.

grades are still the issue

Choral Arts instead of Calculus? This is an example of what some students might have found on their program at the beginning of the year. Schedule changes were commonplace the first few weeks of school. Both the guidance counselors and Dr. Carlson had to deal once again with a flood of students rushing into their offices demanding that the "computer error" on their program be fixed. Actually, very few were computer errors. The mistakes on their programs were put there intentionally to get the student to discuss with a counselor the courses that were selected.

The number of students that had to get their schedules changed was no more or less than in recent years, but there were different reasons for program mix-ups. One of the biggest reasons was the addition of an extra lab period. The extra class meant that students had to pick six courses instead of five. This presented Dr. Elliot Carlson, Dean of studies, with the challenge of giving every student the classes that they chose. (Don't forget, we're talking about fourteen hundred students!)

Most of the students were able to have their programs worked out so they got what they signed up for, but there were a few groups of people whose schedules were harder to work out. The people that presented the most problems were the senior work study students and the members of the band, because those courses had to be scheduled for certain set times. But all in all, most students were finally satisfied with their course schedules.

the media considered

Last year, people may have noticed stickers pasted into their Programs of Studies. These stickers told about a recently added course—Film-Making and Media Study. Taught by Marguerite Gonsalves, it was open only to juniors and seniors. The purpose of the course was to study and produce films, photographs, and videos, and to provide a background in advertising and the media in general.

Some people might have thought that film-making was a new course, and that this was its first year. Not true. The course was originally initiated by the government, but was dropped because of Proposition 2½. It was reinstated at the request of the students. Their interest in the subject prompted a petition that, in addition to the fact that a lot of costly equipment was gathering dust, persuaded the School Board to add it once again to the curriculum.

Students enrolled in the course soon found that it was much more difficult than they had bargained for. They discovered that they would have to study three separate texts. They did photo projects, made slides, and planned out their own advertisements. An in-depth study of film—including the terminology—was conducted, and they even made one of their own.

Although the work may have been more difficult than students had anticipated, it was not overpowering. On the whole, members of the class were extremely satisfied. It is likely that film-making will remain a bright spot in the curriculum of the school for many years to come.

working out extra lab

It has been several years since the idea of two consecutive lab periods has been in the curriculum. Many of the students, as well as teachers, felt that the additional lab period has proven to be an advantage. Senior Cheryl Cardelli, an Anatomy and Physiology student, said, "I think that it is a great idea. I look at the labs that we have to do, the same lab students of previous years have had, and I appreciate the extra time. When you have a long involved lab, the additional time eases some of the pressure."

The advantages of a double lab period have proven to be beneficial to both the teacher and the student. In many cases, labwork takes longer than the allotted 40 minute class. The time for set up and clean up take away from the actual experiments. With the additional time, students dealt more easily with their assignments. With the majority of students holding down after school jobs, the double lab period enabled them to put in the time needed without always having to put in the after school hours.

One problem involved with this process was scheduling. The man faced with this dilemma was the Dean of Studies, Dr. Elliot Carlson. In addition to the unusual scheduling problems, the extra science lab added to the confusion facing both faculty and students. But with a little patience and some hard work, the kinks were worked out.

It was generally agreed upon that the double lab periods were beneficial to those involved, and was basically a good idea.

Students like Jim Ventura learn different aspects of the science field while dissecting the heart of a sheep.

Writing science labs may take a lot of hard work and thinking, but the knowledge that comes out of this is well worth the while.

Mr. Melvin Baran discussed with his Business Law students the rights and obligations of a person involved in a contract.

Business law has been in the high school for more than twenty-five years and yet it has really never received much recognition. But recently there has been an increase in the classes, and an abundance of students included it in their Program of Studies.

Much of the interest was due to the teacher, Melvin Baran, who, along with several student teachers, made the class more interesting than before. For the most part, Mr. Baran taught contractual law, teaching students how to make a contractual agreement.

Aside from teaching students contracts, the class also taught factors that would help students later in life. They learned about their basic rights as minors, how things would change as they became adults, and how to handle everyday situations by following the law.

Senior Business Law student Laurie Morando had a favorable view concerning the class. Laurie said, "I found out that some rights I thought people had are not rights at all, and I also became aware of rights I never knew I had." Paul Mahoney had nothing but rave reviews for the class, giving most of the credit to Baran. "We learn new things every day, and Mr. Baran allows us to work at our own pace."

For those students in business, the class proved to be a valuable asset. For those who weren't, the class was also beneficial in that it taught them their rights along with information that would stay with them their whole lives and be of great value.

Mr. Baran watched closely and carefully as his senior Business Law students took their quizzes.

experience counts

If you found yourself strolling through the corridor on the ground or first floor of "A" building, you would have run into various parts of the Occupational Education Department. This included the Wood Shop, Auto Shop, Power Shop, Metal Shop and Electronics Shop.

If you had visited any of these shops throughout the year, you would have seen many projects in the making. Some of these activities included preparing decorations for the senior prom, making trophy cases for the school hallways, and a lectern for Mr. Wright to aid in addressing the student body and faculty.

Had you toured these floors further, you would have discovered some new equipment being used which was acquired through federal funding. The department received a new power lift and computers to aid in the drafting courses. They also received a 1986 Century Buick for students of the Auto Shop to work on and learn from.

You would also have noticed the increasing number of females that took shop, proving that women can function just as well in the same jobs that men can.

The students who walked down those corridors in "A" building every day found out all about the Occupational Education Department. They learned the skills which were taught to them well. These skills would be of great use to them in their future professions, or in the schools they attend. The experience they received will prove to be invaluable.

During the year, Senior John Vidic worked to fix many mechanical problems of the automobile in the Auto Shop.

Sophomore Mark Clancy learned to operate the machinery in Wood Shop needed to work on various projects throughout the year.

Senior Edward O'Connor learned to make a table along with many other projects from the opportunities which Wood Shop provided.

Kelly Crooker with the help of John Dempsey in the Power Shop learned about many aspects of the automobile.

Shelly Caswell painted the lecturn which she made for Mr. Wright with the skills she acquired in the Metal Shop.

An inventive way of teaching was to have a student teacher instruct the students.

working with electricity

The world of electronics—a world into which few students dared to venture. A trip into room A-102 left one baffled and amazed. Complete with two robots named "Biff" and "Buffy", and many other often-used dismantled objects, the students learned first-hand what made things work.

Biff and Buffy were designed to talk in several pitches, walk (with wheels) and pick up objects with their one "arm". They were teenaged versions of "The Big One"—the ultimate computer that would wash cars, clean rooms, and do homework, laundry and dishes—among other things. Teacher Bill Faria stated, "The computer and other contraptions help students find answers to their own questions without simply reading it from a textbook."

By comparing the various parts of a radio to those of a house, Faria employed one of his diversified teaching methods, using examples kids could relate to. Another method Faria practiced was the "team" method. The more capable and advanced students teamed with the less experienced members of the class. "The inexperienced learn from their peers, while the trained kids either find their mistakes or reinforce what they already know," explained Faria.

Since electronics is such an important part of life today, and it will probably continue to expand, students should be encouraged to take this course. The hands-on experience it provided should prove to be invaluable.

if it works, you use it

"Computer Programming, Business Law, American Issues, what should I take for next year?" That question was asked by most Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors. The answer depended on the student's individual ability, desire and often his past courses taken. However, there were some classes that should have been chosen merely because of the experience of having the course itself or the teacher instructing the class.

Dr. James McCann's Latin and Classical Cultures classes are some. Students have had many learning experiences. They were able to take their quizzes on a computer. They got the opportunity to teach the class and also video tape their classes. This enabled students that had been absent to be exposed to the material that had been discussed while they were absent.

In Mr. Thomas O'Donnell's World Problems class, the students were assisted by a portable microphone in giving their oral reports. It provided them with a better feeling of public speaking. Mr.

O'Donnell often had guest speakers, as well.

The students of Mr. John O'Brien, not only were able to read many plays but also were able to act them out in class. This helped them to relate to the characters better than if they had simply read on their their own.

The French students had the opportunity to listen to a native of France talk of her country.

There were many other classes that provided different methods of teaching, which made learning more exciting.

Classes were videotaped so that absent students could view what they missed. Students often tried to ham it up for the camera.

Mr. James Drummey, a representative of the John Birch Society, shared his controversial views.

Our own Dr. Elliot Carlson lectured Classical Cultures students on morality in ancient societies compared with that of today.

learning about values

We have always had various experts come in to speak to us about various things. It seemed that a lot of our speakers had been discussing important issues lately, subjects that required thought.

To celebrate National Women's Week, the Malden Living Museum brought two of their special elders. These women told us their histories and about the obstacles they had to face because they were women.

A very interesting speaker that a few classes had the opportunity to hear was Mr. James Drumme, a member of the John Birch Society. His views on Communism in America, considered radical by many, sparked a lot of interesting discussions.

Our speakers were by no means restricted to the Social Studies Department. Dr. Elliot Carlson, Dean of Studies, made quite a hit in Dr. McCann's Classical Cultures course. He spoke of the modern issues of today that were also problems to the ancient Greeks.

Language classes were also active during foreign Language week. This event stressed the importance of exposure to other cultures. Most language classes did something to celebrate. Many teachers assigned posters expressing the theme "Foreign Language: Don't leave home without it."

These speakers gave us the opportunity to get out of the normal class routine and learn something different. We spent time thinking about important issues instead of just sitting in class. We heard new views and opinions, which led us to re-evaluate our own.

These pinatas were an example of the influence of Foreign Language Week which elicited excitement both here and in the junior high schools.

a major part of the formula

Sports have always played a major role in a student's high school career.

Whether a participant or a spectator, most students had given some thought to the matter. If we weren't reading about them, we were hearing about them, until it got to the point where even the most disinterested students found themselves involved.

"Buy why not?" the sports fans cry. "The thrill of victory, the agony of defeat," and so on, etc., ad infinitum. True enough. But why do players feel that rush when they, for example, throw a ball through what in actuality is little more than an extremely large two-pronged fork?

Competition. The whole thing stems back to competition. Whether as an individual or as a team, the players want to win, to beat, to out-do the others. And they need not even be playing against someone else. They could be just trying to improve their own individual skills.

Of course, competition is not the only good thing about sports. Players learn good sportsmanship and teamwork. They learn to take the attitude that, even if they don't perform so well themselves, they hope the team does well as a whole.

Physical exertion also provides a terrific release for aggression. The aggravation and pressure of school is released during practice. Hey, why go home and kick the dog when you've been playing soccer all afternoon?

Sports are a healthy way to relieve tensions and learn to get along in life.

The field hockey team may have had one of its best seasons in many years. The varsity squad was a very young team, having only three seniors on it. They were not expected to do very well and were an underdog team. But despite their preseason ranking, the team disproved everyone's doubts and went on to an excellent season.

The team finished the season with a 8-3-5 record, which carried them to a second place finish in the Greater Boston League. The team leaders were senior co-captains Donna McCarthy and Pam Bello. The leading scorers for the team were Pam Bello and Junior Ann Marie Johnson with ten goals apiece. The defense of the team was outstanding they kept the score low in every game, and created many scoring opportunities for the offense. The defense had many quality players such as Raquel Procopio and Gina Colleta. Another outstanding player was Junior Terry Butland. She played in the goalie's position and recorded nine shutouts for the year. Three players made the Greater Boston League All Star team for their excellent play throughout the season. They were Senior Co-captain Pam Bello and juniors AnnMarie Johnson and Terry Butland, who was the outstanding goalie of the league. Another excellent aspect was the depth of the team. There were always more players who were ready to come in and play their best. Some outstanding second string players were Juniors Peggy Carroll and Melissa Shraiar, and Heidi Kalman and Robin Freedman.

Overall, the team felt good about their play during the season. They played well all season and worked together. Senior Co-captain Donna McCarthy said "We were consistant all season and played very well together."

The only difficult opponents they faced in the G.B.L. were Bishop Fenwick and Arlington. One of the most exciting games of the season came against Bishop Fenwick. The game resulted in a 0-0 tie because of a strong performance by the defense and Terry Butland. Another highlight of the season was qualifying for the state tournament. For the first time ever they were ranked high enough to play a team with a lower record and play on their home field. But because of the bad field conditions at Pine Banks Park, the home field advantage had to be given to the opponent Lexington won 2-0 but that did not diminish the feeling of success.

The Soccer team, under the direction of first year coach Rich Bransfield, faced a losing battle all season. The season started with a new attitude and direction under Coach Bransfield. The year began with a larger than usual turnout of thirty players. That, however, dwindled to a solid nucleus of twenty. The team had only three seniors on the starting line up. The other members were juniors and sophomores.

The team finished the season with a 2-11-1 record in the Greater Boston League. Some reasons for this were that the team was very young and inexperienced. The season started with a game against the strong Medford Mustangs. It was a close game which was played down to the wire with a final score of 4-3. The game was tied with only two minutes left to play when Medford scored the winning goal. The players gained some confidence by playing so well against such a strong team. They then went on to beat Revere and even up their record. Next came a tie against Chelsea. The team was playing well. Then the turning point in the season came in a game against Arlington. Arlington was held in the first half, but came out and scored six goals in the second half. After that they went on to a 1-8 record. Many of those games were close and lost by only one or two points. One of the highlights of the season came in a game played against Malden Catholic under the lights of McDonald Stadium. They tied with a score of 2-2. A goal by Dave Cagno in the closing minutes of the game tied it up.

The leading point getters on the team were sophomore George Boukouvals, and juniors Nick Lecce, and Steve Lebrum. The team was led by Tri-Captains Dave Cagno, Dave Howard, and Jim Ventura. Sophomore Rob Sciardone and junior Nick Lecce were named to the G.B.L. All-Star team.

Sophomore Rob Sciardone, who made the G.B.L. All-Star first team, raced to challenge an Everett opponent for possession of the ball.

Senior Co-captain Jim Ventura raced an Everett opponent to the ball as he charged down field for a goal.

Junior Dave Howard was all alone as he kicked the ball down the field in an attempt to set up a scoring opportunity.

Sophomore Rob Sciardone, a promising player, dribbled the ball down the field to set up a play for a scoring attempt.

Senior Jim Ventura battled an Everett opponent for control of the ball on a scoring drive.

Sophomore Matt Smith ran alongside an Everett opponent for control of the ball in a scoring drive.

Did you ever have a season when one game could depend on either being Co-champs or the number two team in the GBL? The football team experienced the disappointment of being number two; Fate chose them to be in second place.

At first, the season didn't look too promising for the football team; they lost their first three games. Their defense was not up to their highest potential. But once the team found their faults, everything fell into place. The offense became very explosive; Malden won their next six games. In general, the team had good spirit and never gave up. Both the offense and the defense contributed equally to their victories. Overall, the Tornadoes had a good season, which their fans enjoyed very much.

There were two games which the team enjoyed playing: the Everett game and the Revere game. The Everett game was a favorite because this was a game in which Malden played against a challenging team. The Revere game was favored by the team because it was more fun and less competitive for the athletes. But their games weren't always fun; they were more competitive.

This season's Thanksgiving Day game was one of those games which proved to be competitive. The game was important to the team because this was the game in which Malden had to win to become Co-Champs of the GBL. The Tornadoes played a tough game, but Medford was a little tougher. Many players felt that their loss was due to the postponement of the game when snow fell on the field. Despite the weather conditions, Malden still wanted to play, but the desire was not granted to the players. Malden lost 28 to 20.

Coach Finn was pleased with the team this year, especially with the performances of Seniors Reggie Hayes and Steve Monaco. These two extraordinary athletes set school records for Malden. Reggie made 1,164 running yards with 15 touchdowns, and Steve made 1,234 passing yards with 12 touchdowns. Along with these two players were other spectacular athletes such as Chris Finn, Moose Gennetti, Jim Connell, Bob Murray, Jim Moffitt, Dan Garcia, and Brian Tirrell. Without these players, victories would have been very hard to achieve.

There was one thing athletes had to learn in order to be good at what they did—concentration. Students often found themselves thinking about other things during the game instead of what they were supposed to be doing. A problem with school or an argument with a friend might have been the cause of a student's not playing of his or her highest potential, or athletes could have just been nervous because of the fact that they were playing in front of so many unfamiliar faces. Without concentration, there would have been many mistakes or mishaps that made the sports participant disapproved with their talents.

Once the student concentrated on the game, something wonderful happened. Great talents came out that sports fans had never seen. This kept the fans coming back. To have a special ability and to have concentration along with it led to team victories and later on maybe an athletic scholarship. This made the team proud and continue to do better and improve more.

Along with concentration, patience, speed, and enthusiasm were needed to make the player an excellent athlete. Patience was essential throughout all the long difficult practices while waiting for the chance to shine during the game. Speed was a necessity in order to have a better chance at winning by being faster than or out-running the opponents. And where would the team be without enthusiasm?

Players needed support from their teammates in order to have a better game. This encouragement from the fans was needed to show teammates their confidence and support. The spirit of the school was expressed in the way that the team played and the crowd cheered. Never giving up and always giving in to the spirit of the school is just one way we showed our pride. Without support the players would not feel as confident about their abilities. With these ingredients for a good team, our athletes can never go wrong.

The cross-country and indoor track teams suffered from very small turnouts this year. The boys team had nine members while the girls team only had five. Despite those low numbers, both teams turned in a respectable record of 3-4. The teams were led by Senior Captains Steve Fox and Nancy Cavanaugh. Both have been members of the squad for four years. Although Steve Fox was injured halfway through the season he remained a dedicated captain. The boys' team was led by newcomer junior Todd Ledbury. Other outstanding runners were seniors Bill Bushee and Paul English, and sophomores Rich Cavanaugh and Alan Biscan. Nancy Cavanaugh led the girls team throughout the season. She finished the season undefeated and also set a new record with a time of 19:14 over the Pine Banks course. She also was named to the Greater Boston League All-Star team for the fourth consecutive year. Other fine runners were sophomores Heather Doonan and Ann-Marie Sullivan.

The indoor track teams had an even greater problem with the small turnout. Cross-country is only one race, but in indoor track there are nine events. With only seven members on the girls team and four on the boys team, some events did not even have someone entered in them. The girls team had many first place finishes in all the meets but just did not have the depth to get the second and third places which are needed to win. But despite this, some fine individual performances were turned in by Lawrence Hicks and Jeff Strasnick. Also by Sandy DellaGatta, Lesley Knight, and Nancy Cavanaugh.

Most girls, who have always wanted to become a cheerleader when they got to high school found out that it was more work than they thought. Many girls who signed up for cheerleading in hope of making the squad, soon realized the effort and dedication that must be put in for the title of "cheerleader".

Many found out that they did not have enough time to be a cheerleader. The cheerleaders practiced every day after school from one to three o'clock. They also had to give up time for the games themselves which meant Friday nights and Saturdays. One of the hardest parts of being a cheerleader was probably the fact that they had to keep their spirits and the spirits of the crowd when the team was down, they could not and did not give up hope. An even harder task was done by Co-captains Dedi Wheeler and Pam Taglieri. Their job was to keep up the spirits of the other girls as well as the crowd. They also had to organize the girls and keep them together.

Students are slowly

realizing the work required to become a cheerleader. This is probably the reason for the decline in the number of girls trying out for cheerleading since 1982. The Cheerleaders also have the longest season out of all sports. When one sport ended, the cheerleaders still had to have practices for the next sport. There is a lot of work and time required to be a cheerleader, and those girls who did find the time and put in the time were rewarded with every victory of the team.

the individual sports

There were many teams in the school that depended on individual ability. Each person on the team worked independently to get points. The rifle team was one of these teams. The rifle team had a very successful season. Co-captain Kevin O'Brien said that although the team was small, they had done very well. He said that the team had a lot of ability and talent. The team practiced after school Monday through Thursday until five o'clock at the Malden Police Station. There was the need for a lot of practice for the rifle team in order to develop poise, aim, and accuracy, but these practices payed off in the end. All in all, the team had a very successful season.

The golf club did not have as successful season as rifle. This was probably due to an especially small team. There were many talented individuals on the golf club, led by Captain Dave Pashoian. This team also required much practice in order to develop a good swing and aim.

And yet another team in which individuality was a necessity was the wrestling team. The wrestlers balanced off their season; winning some and losing almost as many matches. Overall, the wrestling team was quick and strategic. The people responsible for these sensational moves were seniors Phil Madeira, Bill O'Mahoney, and Keith Antonangeli. Without these three, the team would have had a harder time winning matches.

The team's practices were one of the hardest out of all the teams' practices. The wrestlers started off with calisthenics. Then they ran the stairs, which consisted of running up and down four flights of stairs three times. If the team didn't run the stairs, then they sprinted down the halls of the school.

Individual ability made the difference for these teams.

another season on ice

The varsity hockey team was relatively a young team. While the varsity team usually consisted of seniors and juniors, it now included five sophomores and three freshmen. The lack of experience in the underclassmen, may have contributed to the team's relatively unsuccessful season, but coach Richard Cullen said that whatever they lacked in experience, they made up for in effort. Mr. Cullen took time to work with his team where they needed it most. He took time to try to develop confidence in his players.

The team practiced three days a week and had games twice a week. During these long practices, the upperclassmen, the more experienced players, could help the others. They practiced working as a team. Although the year did not start out very successfully, the team never stopped trying and their coach was behind them all the way. The team ended up finishing in 6th place in the GBL.

Special leadership qualities were found in the five seniors on the team, and especially in the co-captains Dan Gardner and Steve Dibenecictis. Both of these players had outstanding seasons, Gardner on defense and Dibenecictis as goalie. These two captains and the other seniors of the team set the example for the underclassmen. The sophomores and freshmen can learn from these players and develop the skill for future years.

The success of the team does not only depend on the older players of the team. The younger players are just as important as the older players that put in just as much effort try just as hard. Even to make the varsity team as a freshmen or sophomore was a great accomplishment. No matter what the ages of the players were, they all had to work just as hard and as a team. It took a combined effort and each of the players had to work to reach a common goal.

the season got better

The swim team started off the season slowly but ended up with a strong finish. In Greater Boston League meets, they beat Arlington but suffered losses to Peabody and Medford. The loss to Peabody was early in the season. This gave them a third place finish in the G.B.L. They came back, however, in the final meet of the season, which was the league meet, and beat Peabody. This gave them a second place finish. That was just one sign of the steady improvement throughout the season.

One of the reasons for the steady improvements was the large amount of underclassmen on the team. They were not used to the practices and meets at the beginning, but quickly adapted and improved greatly as the season progressed. The seniors on the team also improved steadily.

The team was led by senior co-captain Andy Zamani and Todd Freeman. Andy Zamani did the 500 and was always improving his time. Freeman did the butterfly. Although he suffered a back injury, he stayed with it. Other seniors on the team were Carolyn Tamagna, who participated in the 500 freestyle, the 200 freestyle, and the 50 freestyle, and Bill Bushee, who swam consistently well, and Steve Kalman. Yet another great swimmer was junior Jim Hennessey, who kept improving his times.

The divers contributed greatly to the team's efforts. They were senior Pam Bello, junior Susan Boughter, and freshman John Johnson. The divers were one of the most valuable aspects of the swim team.

it's worth the effort

Did you ever walk by a track practice and say, "Why would anyone want to do all that work? or "Who has time for that?" It is true that athletics requires a lot of hard work and a lot of time, but there is a reward. This reward can only come to those people who gave up their time and work hard every day. This reward was the feeling of accomplishment. It was the feeling that you got from winning a game, a race, scoring a goal, or breaking a record. It is also a feeling of knowing that you really worked to reach that goal.

It is a lot of work to be on a team of any kind. Some teams practice for 2½ hours everyday of a school week and also on Saturday mornings. This is a lot of time, considering that students also have their subjects to prepare for, and that means a lot of homework. Giving time up for a practice a day and for homework leaves no time for other social activities. It seems that it is a day of all work. But practices are not all work. Some days team members can have fun helping each other. They share the victories and they share the defeats. They get through the tough practices together and they get through easy practices together.

Many athletes get fed up every once in a while and consider not going to some practices. They do not feel like bothering or forget what they are working for. But a certain dedication within players that have felt the reward forces them to go to that practice, and when it comes to the competition they are glad that they did. Pep talks from the coach or other team members help keep up the spirits but the individual players must really want to reach that goal. It must be worth it to the player, all the long tedious practices for the final achievement.

So if you ever considered joining a sport, but didn't have the time or thought that you didn't want to put in the effort, or that you couldn't handle it, try it! Make the time, because the reward that you will get will be much greater than the effort that you put in. Once you win a game and have a feeling of accomplishment, you will understand what competition is all about.

some games to remember

The Malden Girls' Basketball Team finished the season 4-14, but the record was not indicative of the successful season they experienced. Led by Tri-Captains Michelle Singleton, Donna McCarthy, and Lynn Murphy, the girls played hard, aggressive, and exciting basketball all year. Coach Don Brunelli Jr. praised his lady hoopsters by saying, "This was by far one of the most exciting, rewarding, and enjoyable teams I have ever been associated with. The Senior leadership was tremendous both on and off the court." Being the smallest team in the league forced the girls to use their quickness and hustle in carrying teams to their highest level of play. Senior Liz Coughlin said, "We didn't care how big and tall the other team was, we just played hard the entire game."

There were quite a few games which were well remembered. "The Brockton game had guards bigger than our center," remembered Michelle Singleton. Another was the win over Quincy two days before Christmas. "In this game the Seniors took over," Coach Brunelli said. After the game, Lynn Murphy said "We wanted this real bad." Donna McCarthy reported, "After our dismal season last year, we just wanted to go out and prove ourselves." The girls' first GBL victory came at the expense of Chelsea. Archrival Medford was the next to add on a victory. Senior Heather Emory commented, "We were not going to be denied our chance at beating our rival Medford." On to Somerville, where in double overtime Malden prevailed. It was Michelle leading the way and Junior AnnMarie Johnson scored the winning basket for one of the most exciting and intense games of the year.

End of the year honors were given to three members of the team. AnnMarie Johnson and Donna McCarthy were named as honorable mentions to the GBL All-Star Team. For the second year in a row Michelle Singleton was unanimously selected as first team All Star. She also received the highest GBL honor of the year, Outstanding GBL Player of the Year. Coach Brunelli was very proud of his team.

third place in gbl

The boy's basketball team has one of its best seasons in many years. Their overall record for the year was 10-10. Their Greater Boston League record, however, was 10-7 which gave them a third place finish in the league. The team got off to a slow start, but became better and improved as the season went on. There were some losses early, but as the season progressed they came together and played more as a team. Every players' efforts counted in a game. The third place finish in the GBL was the teams best record since 1975.

The team just missed qualifying for the state tournament which takes the top two teams in the league. A third place finish put them just out of reach.

The team was led by Senior captain Dave Pashoian. He was also the scoring leader, averaging 14.5 points per game. Other Seniors were Jim Whitson and Steve Monaco. With only one starting Senior, Dave Pashoian, the team was very young. The others starters were juniors Chuck Borstel, Scott Byrne, and Greg Gouvalaris, and sophomre Lamar Boseman.

Honors were received by players and coach. Dave Pashoian was named to the Greater Boston League All-Star team and Chuck Borstel was given honorable mention. Mr. Jay Sweeney, the head coach was named the GBL coach of the year.

One of the closest games of the season came in a game against Somerville. The game was tied with 10 seconds left. Dave Pashoian made a drive to the hoop. In a call that could have gone either way, he was called for charging. Games like these were indicative of mant games.

having a group to call your own

Although there were not as many organizations as in past years, we still had a vast array of activities to partake in. Many of the students found themselves committed to several groups—which eventually coincided with one another. This posed a problem: "Which meeting should I go to? SADD has an important meeting after school, but there is also a meeting for the dance committee. Oh no, wait a minute. I forgot that I have to make up a test today!" Scenes like this occurred on a regular basis for active students.

Throughout the four years of high school, the activities began to pile up. Most of the organizations were open to every student, with the exception of a few clubs exclusively for the upperclassmen. The John W. Hutchin's Chapter of the National Honor Society is one such club.

This group consisted of those who had excelled in their studies throughout their stay at MHS. Some of the other organizations included LIT, SADD, Greenroom, and Key Club. The number of activities available was virtually limitless.

The organizations of the school serve purposes other than their causes, a sort of bonus. They teach the students cooperation, working together toward a common goal. Planning an event required participation and enthusiasm in large amounts; and that's what the members had. And teaching these things to the students was a major focus. Our organizations boosted morale, taught people to work together, and were an important part of the life of the school.

family four months a year

The band, because of its efforts, was making a name for itself throughout New England. After only four short years, they had become one of the most talked about and recognized bands in the NESBA (New England Scholastic Band Association). When asked about the band's popularity Director Mel Blackman stated, "I hear it [the name] statewide."

The band was invited to compete in the Coast Guard's annual Windjammer Invitational. The bus ride was long, and they didn't place first . . . or second . . . or third . . . but they were one of the few bands in their division that was honored with a standing ovation from the entire audience.

What was the high point for the Marching Band? "The highlight had to be the Coca-Cola Centennial parade in Atlanta, GA," Blackman boasted. "186 bands applied nationwide; only 20 were selected." Ours was one of those distinguished twenty. To emphasize the honor that was bestowed upon them, Blackman added, "We were the only band accepted from New England."

Along with an award-winning marching band, we had a very fine Concert Orchestra and jazz band.

The Jazz Band, led by Carole Blake, was active in school and community activities despite their smaller size. One of the reasons for the lack of members was the Monday night rehearsals. The practices were an inconvenience for students who had jobs, homework, or other commitments. Yet the Jazz Band played at the annual Winter Concert and had many job offers.

The Orchestra, which was also smaller in size, provided students with the opportunity to learn different aspects of music. Unlike Marching Band, the Orchestra played more classical music and varied rhythms.

No matter what type of music organization a student chose to participate in, the long practices paid off in the end. It was a chance for a student to have fun while gaining a musical education.

return to commitment

Clubs and organizations made up a large part of a student's life. Attending meetings and functions not only gave students something to do after school, it also allowed students to meet other people other than the ones in their classes—people with similar interests.

Students were often ready to give of themselves. For example, the Key Club, which had a great number of dedicated students, managed to incorporate some functions which were beneficial to the community. They held a Halloween party for the tots at Kidstop daycare center, started "Project Triangle" to help the handicapped, and held bingo for elderly people in a nursing home. The Literary Society combined with Mational Honors to provide a hearty Thanksgiving dinner for needy families in Malden.

Another group which was started to help people was SADD, an acronym for Students Against Driving Drunk. This group aimed to lower the number of students (or anyone else, for that matter) involved in an accident whild driving intoxicated. SADD members went to junior high schools to encourage youngsters to "stop before they start." Vice President Steven Fox stated "teenagers don't have to become another statistic."

Other groups were purely social groups. although these groups had been around for a while, there were some new changes. For example, the Academic Quiz Team, which competed against other cities for points, finally obtained bells. Making it easier for students to signal in time may have attributed to the fact that we were on a winning streak. Never before had Malden won so many consecutive matches.

One thing all clubs required from its members was commitment. It took effort to accomplish the things that made a group successful. And successful they were. With interested, dedicated students, the various school clubs enjoyed quite a good year.

The Madrigals are greatly acclaimed; both for their appearance and for the ability to liven the hearts of their audiences.

an art finding itself

The Choral Arts Society, directed by John Haussler, consists of a group of musically talented students who work on improving and perfecting their singing. It is broken up into four groups: Treble Clef, which is made up of freshmen only; Concert Choir and Chorale, both of which consist of sophomores, juniors, and seniors; and Madrigals, whose members are especially talented and have perhaps more commitment than the others involved in Choral Arts.

Madrigals was involved with many activities unrelated to the school, in addition to their normal performances. At Christmastime, they could be heard caroling at the Davenport Estate, Lord & Taylor's, Malden Square, and even throughout the halls of our high school itself. They also attended a Kiwanis luncheon and had several engagements around the city.

Choral Arts' major achievement of the year was the new, greater recognition they received. At their first performance of the year, the Winter Concert, they received their first standing ovation. Their reception was similar throughout the year, and members were stopped on the street by "fans" who recognized them. Senior Joanne Callahan said, "I think the public was surprised by [the quality of] the performance." Junior Dan Stone felt that "they [the audience] put us out in the spotlight."

In past years, the society would occasionally have trouble filling a house. But they decided to try something new, and invited all the alumna of the groups, including an invitation to join them on stage for the finale. This project was extremely successful.

Perhaps the proudest achievement of the Choral Arts Society was the fact that three of its members tried out for District Chorus. Judy Bionelli, Joanne Callahan, and Gary Cuhna not only were accepted, it was suggested that they also audition for State Choir. Of this, we can all be proud.

still working at 2:12

There are three Publications in the school that are written for the students and by the students, one of which you are currently reading. Maldonian, the yearbook, has been in publication since 1919, and is presently supervised by Richard Appleyard. The co-editors were Carol Murphy and Kelly Daugherty and for the first time ever a junior, Jennifer Cooper, was asked to take the laborious job of Copy Editor. When asked about this, she stated, "It's a lot of work but I enjoy doing it, and I like working with the people." These people had a rough job because everything but the printing was done in the school itself.

The Blue and Gold is the school newspaper. Again with the help of the graphic arts department, the students were able to publish and print the newspaper themselves.

Thomas Maher, advisor for the past 13 years, stated, "I am proud to be associated with Blue and Gold." Gary Drevitch was the Editor in Chief, publishing some great issues.

The LIT Oracle, published by members of the Literary Society, is the school's third publication. It was revived by John O'Brien last year, after having been terminated by Proposition 2½. It gave creative students an opportunity to see their poetry, short stories, essays, artwork, and photography in print. The LIT Oracle came out twice this year—once in January and again in May.

All of these publications have things in common. For example, deadlines were a major issue that everyone in any of these groups had to contend with. Stories had to be written within a certain time period, and if they weren't, complications arose. Cooperation and participation were also common to all groups. If people didn't participate, nothing could be accomplished. People had to work together to get the finished product, so that they would have a successful year and an enjoyable publication.

Kate Dickie, deep in thought, had the long and tedious task of listing every Malden High School Band member in their group photo.

the formula starts with people

Within the following page, you will find everybody. No kidding—everybody is here. We're talking, if you're looking for everybody, this is the place to find it. Everbody who was in any way, shape or form involved with the workings of our beloved high school is here.

Herein is to be found the conglomeration of all high school types. "Jocks", "Brains", "Trendies" and "Punks" are all mixed in together here, stripped of their labels and classified alphabetically only, forced to stand on their own as individuals.

Speaking of individuals, let's not forget those who defied all stereotypes. The girl who burst into laughter for no apparent reason periodically during your English class is in this section. Likewise the guy who muttered about snails next to you in homeroom for four years.

You see, the primary function of this section is the assemble all of these different people, who composed a vital part of the school, and arrange them in such a way as to be easy to find. Because this section might be the only place to find them.

As a matter of fact, these pictures are important even for those people who were extremely active in extra-curricular activities.

Consider a track star; while it's true he may be in '87 sports photos, where can you find a picture of him in normal clothes?

So now — sit back, relax, and browse through the following pages at your leisure. Meet everybody.

with a lot of love

The job of advisor has given me the opportunity to take the extra step into the lives of my students, an opportunity that a classroom teacher doesn't always get. I became your advisor because I couldn't say no to a man I respect. I continued being an advisor because of what I got out of it. Family and friends questioned my decision to continue after Donald was born. In my mind that was no decision at all.

We have some dreams you and I and they won't be fulfilled until the last one of you walks across the stage at graduation. You will leave that field as adults to face a whole new set of dreams. Please know that you'll leave with very best wishes and a lot of love from someone who will hold a special little piece of each of you in her heart for the rest of her life.

Christine MacKay
Head Advisor

I would like to thank the Class of 1986 for giving me the opportunity to work with them. Good luck to all of you. The experience will always be a treasured memory.

Debra Moretti

Members of the Senior Council, a newly formed group of elected representatives, listened intently to the meeting's agenda.

As being Treasurer for the past three years, I've received much experience and have become closer with my fellow classmates. I've greatly enjoyed working with Mrs. MacKay, Mr. Burnelli, and most helpful of people, the Asst. Treasurer Paul Mahoney. I'd like to thank the Class of '86 for an unforgettable and exciting four years. I wish you all Good Luck in the future.

Diane DiMarco
Treasurer

We have all grown these past few years as individuals, unafraid to show our true feelings, and not embarrassed to be ourselves. We have also learned the importance of having true friends. This is why it is important when leaving Malden High to remember that even though our friends aren't with us every day, we must never forget to keep a special place reserved for them in our hearts.

Karen Silliker
Secretary

I am grateful for having been given the opportunity to serve as Asst. Treasurer. I have found this position to be both an enjoyable and rewarding experience. The great involvement and dedication of our students and faculty has led to an overwhelming success. We'll leave our class with many "treasured memories." Best of luck to each and every member of the Class of '86.

Paul Mahoney
Assistant Treasurer

The Class of 1986 is truly exceptional. We have worked together as a unit, and have accomplished a variety of things. But these things mean little without the people behind them. The students as well as the faculty members have shown qualities of leadership, devotion, organization, and above all determination. I have learned a great deal from these people. Well this is it. We are leaving High School. I just want to wish all of you good luck in your future endeavors, and may everyone have a healthy, happy life.

Daniel DiSano
Vice President

The Class of 1986 will always have a special place in my heart. You have continued to move forward, reach out and accept challenges while overcoming obstacles along the way. For this you are to be commended very highly.

I have thoroughly enjoyed my association with you people. You are now faced with another important stage of your life. Use your past experiences to continue your strive to excellence. Build on your past successes and learn from your past failures. Remember, if you do what you love, you'll love what you do.

I am very proud that I had the opportunity to know and work with you. One more thing, you all look marvelous!

Mr. Don Brunelli Jr.

At the annual financial aid meeting, senior Carol Goodwin looked over some information with her mother.

Senior Bobby Nickerson fills out the necessary forms used to measure for graduation's caps and gowns.

I have enjoyed keeping a record of such a special class and I have enjoyed working with my fellow classmates and teachers. I wish you all good luck in the future and hopes for a happy life.

Carolyn Tamagna
Historian

I would like to thank the Class of '86 for giving me the opportunity of being your class president. It has been an honor serving the best class at Malden High School. Good luck in whatever you do and remember, you'll always be at the Top of the List with the Class of 1986.

Gary Christenson
President

Senior Karen Surette, like most other Seniors, helped out at the annual Senior Class-Red Cross sponsored Blood Drive.

I would like to thank the Class of '86 for all their help and support this year. Everyone's help contributed to four of the best years of our lives. Being a class officer meant a lot to me and I thank everyone for giving me that opportunity. I would just like to say that the Class of '86 will always be "The Top of the List". I would especially like to thank Mrs. MacKay, Mr. Duffy, and Mr. Brunelli for all their help with our class these past four years. Without them our class would not be what it is. I wish everybody the Best of Luck in the future.

Rosemarie Picardi
School Committee Rep.

I ask each of you to look back in time to the person you were when you first entered high school. I'm sure you'll agree that the span is measured by much more than months on a calendar. You've grown and changed so much, and, in fact, will continue to do so. I hope you like the person you've become. I hope we helped you when you needed help. Please believe that we always tried to do our best for you. As for me, I've enjoyed it. As usual, Robert Frost says it better?
 "My object in living is to unite my avocation and my vocation, as my two eyes make one sight. Only where love and need are one, and the work is play for mortal stakes, is the deed ever really done, for heaven and the future's sakes."
 Good Luck. I'll be around.

B.L. Duffy

I have enjoyed working for the class these past few years and I wish you all happiness for the future.

Lawrence Gilligan
 Vice President

My two years as a Class officer have been very special to me. Working with my peers has taught me how to grow and develop. I would like to thank my classmates, advisors and teachers for contributing to the best four years of my life. Always remember that the Class of 1986 will be at the top of my list always.

Marie Burns
Assistant Secretary

Dan DiSano and Paul Mahoney watch over Timothy Rufo while he is donating blood at the Blood Drive.

Now that you are about to leave M.H.S. I hope that you realize that we have tried and, hopefully succeeded in making your years here happy and successful. Always remembering and cherishing the past, I would hope that you look to the future. Remembering the words of Robert Kennedy: "Some men see things as they are and say why, I see things as they should be and say why not."

Patrick O'Sullivan

Along with Mrs. MacKay, Donald Jr. and Mr. MacKay became an intricate part of our class and lives.

Now they finally had their chance. After enduring eighteen years of other people's decisions, seniors had their turn at last. They could do anything, go anywhere. For many, unfortunately, that was precisely the problem. Go where?

A few seniors wanted to take this opportunity to travel, to see the world. Others were moving to various dormitories, on a wide variety of campuses. And then there were those who could afford to find their own apartment, or their own roommate.

Of course, the best solution for some was simply to remain at home. And it must be acknowledged that this option held many advantages. After all, the students already knew the neighborhood, didn't have to worry about forwarding their mail, and got their laundry done free of charge.

In Helen Phillips' class, Denise Carroll participates in a mock job interview with teacher George Lyons.

looking back

Senior year was a time for students to reflect on all the events which had brought them to the point of graduation. This year had the class looking back on all of the activities and experiences that it had been through together.

Not too many students could look back and say that they had accomplished all that they had set out to do. The students that said that they would participate in more activities "next year" had run out of "next year"s. Looking back, the seniors remembered all of the joys and sorrows of the past four years.

A major part of the sorrow was leaving friends and a "secure place" for the unknown. As senior Dawn Powers said, "I'm looking forward to graduation, but I'm going to miss all of the friends I have made over the years."

breaking away

Parents wanted to keep control of their kids' lives. They wanted their kids to listen to them when they were told to do their homework or to clean up their rooms before going out. But kids didn't care what their rooms looked like before they went out.

Seniors didn't have to be in by seven o'clock anymore. A lot of them stayed out until the midnight hour.

Having a driver's license (or better yet, having your own car) made it easier to get from place to place, party to party. Seniors could get together and go to the movies, night clubs, just about anywhere, without having to wait for their parents to pick them up and drop them off. Some parents might not have liked the thought of not knowing where their kids were, but both the parents and the kids were getting a lesson on independence.

i'll never forget

One of the hardest parts about being a senior was deciding what to write for the Senior Biography section of the yearbook. Before putting down what they wanted to say, each senior tried to think of what would be the most memorable. Many people thought of their boyfriends and girlfriends first, but sometimes this was a little premature. Although it would have been nice to say something sweet and romantic, many couples had broken up before the year's end.

Besides thinking of something to be remembered by, the Bios had to reflect your personality. The funniest, easiest Bios dealt with private jokes between friends, times spent together, or initials of good friends or teachers. These were also good as remembrances of things they might have forgotten in time.

Paul Mahoney, Karen Silliker, and Diane DiMarco provide emotional comfort for blood donor Mary Coffin.

gifts of life

Each year, the senior class gives a little piece of themselves to help people in need. One of the ways in which this was done was through the blood drive. Red Cross volunteers made their annual trip to the school last November.

Many of the students had to be turned down because of weight or medical problems. In spite of this, there was a good turnout. Students and faculty, as well as people that came off the street, joined together to help the Red Cross.

Senior Paul Mahoney, chairman of the blood drive along with class advisor Christine McKay and a sizable amount of student volunteers, helped make the blood drive a success. Upon leaving, all could feel good, knowing that they had given a part of themselves to help those in need.

fanning the flame

A lot of seniors were worrying about how they would manage to see their friends after they graduated. Not only would they be unable to see each other five days a week, many people had plans to move out of Malden altogether. People would be getting jobs or attending colleges all over the country, meeting new people and losing contact with their old friends.

This is even more of a problem when two people are involved romantically—especially when only one of them is graduating. Senior Sean Trickett, going out with junior Michelle Beaudin, was optimistic, however, and his words express the hopes held by all parted friends.

"If two people really love and care for each other," said Sean. "The love will still be there, no matter what the distance."

The gang at Pearl Street. At some indefinable point the whole thing actually became fun.

hey, i like it

As the years passed, student opinions changed. People grew accustomed to the high school — in fact, they almost liked it. By senior year, they couldn't imagine going to any other kind of school.

The idea of going somewhere else didn't even really occur to people until senior year. Then, looking through pamphlets in an attempt to decide upon a college, many couldn't see themselves going to school at the places they saw in pictures.

This was a sad time as they realized everything they were used to and had grown to like about high school was going to be abruptly changed. They wondered if they were going to fit in. But the more optimistic seniors realized that, despite their fears, everyone pretty much adapts to their situation and surroundings.

For business students like Rina Puzzanghera the world of work was a very immediate problem.

no more sneakers

Many students had to adapt to the differences between the school and business worlds. They couldn't very well wear their Levis and a Bruce Springsteen shirt to their job, so clothes became an important factor.

The fashions of many of the seniors were geared toward the adult world anyway, so it was easier for them to dress more professionally. Some seniors were dressed so nicely for school that they didn't have to change for their job.

It was rare to see students dressed in three piece business suits, but there were certain clothes items that most seniors owned. For instance, whether male or female, a blazer was an important item. Ties and scarves were also very popular, and hardly anyone wore sneakers anymore. The trend was loafers.

The scene in the cafeteria at the financial aid night for seniors and parents in early December.

rushing them in

For many, the most frustrating part of senior year was having to fill out college applications. The process was hideous. First, you had to learn about colleges to see which ones interested you. This had to be done by every college-bound senior, except for those who were positive which school they wanted to attend.

Once the students decided on a few colleges, they had to go through the tiresome process of filling out the dreaded applications. Students were now faced with essays and personal questions which might have been the deciding factor for acceptance. The frustrations of college applications were so overwhelming at times, they almost made them want to forget about college. But deep down, they knew the time and energy would repay itself many times over.

Deni Evangelista, Head of Guidance, speaks to students and their parents on financing college.

compared to what

As seniors filled out applications, whether for school or jobs, a thought that always crossed their minds was "I wonder what another graduate has done? Will it help or harm my chances for getting the position I want"?

Reviewing what they had done in the past four years made the students think. Many felt that they could have done a much better job if they had tried harder, whether it had to do with grades, sports, clubs, or other extracurricular activities.

Many who had had negative attitudes about their high school years were surprised and somewhat pleased when reviewing what they had done. It was more than they had thought, as it had already passed, and they had forgotten many accomplishments. Students comforted themselves by saying, "I did the best I could at the time."

Council members and advisors Donald Brunelli, and Christine MacKay consider a senior prepayment plan.

the annual ache

One thing that was always a thought in a senior's mind was "Who am I going to go to the prom with?" Sure, they had probably brought up the topic during a discussion in years past, but now the problem had become a reality.

There were people with a steady boyfriend or girlfriend, who knew they had a date. They were the ones that everyone saw smooching in the hallways.

Then there was the other group—the ones with no guaranteed date. These people soon found themselves looking at their classmates in a different way: as possible dates.

Then there were little worries. Examples of these were ripping the gown, wondering if their hair would come out okay, and, of course, that big fear for most girls — tripping up the stairs on the way in.

Heidi Bloom begins the long process toward graduation as she sorts through financial aid advice.

ending up

As senior year approached, students began to feel fear of graduation. The seniors worried whether they had enough credits to ensure them a seat in MacDonald Stadium on June fourth. Plus, all of the worries about choosing what was to follow high school suddenly hit. Seniors then had to decide whether they wanted to attend college or enter the working world.

Once seniors had met the requirements and decided upon their future, they would be proudly taking their seats out on the field. Family and friends would be witnesses to the closing of the doors on childhood and the opening of the doors to the future. Each and every student in the ceremony would be able to ease their fears of graduation by thinking about the events that had made it possible for them to reach this high point in their lives.

A familiar ritual one last time for Peggy Lenehan, Fred Ryer, Scott Ragusa, Karen Silliker, Diane DiMarco.

last time around

The senior year was fun, exciting, and fast paced. Many students went through new and different experiences. Getting senior pictures, writing bios, applying to colleges or jobs, and taking SATS were just some of these things. But a feeling of sadness struck the students when they realized that it was their last chance to participate in them.

There's a different aspect of this situation also. Some of the students who weren't that active throughout their high school years thought twice about attending these events. Instead of thinking "This will be my last time to go to this game," they thought "since I haven't attended many games, I'll show my support and go to this one." As a result many functions had a greater number of seniors attending.

Part of what's happening, Steve Mauriello, Cheryl Cardarelli and Rob Smith with Mel Blackman.

that wasn't me

Seniors were concerned about how they looked to other people. They had the perfect chance to change their image if they wanted to after graduation. No matter where they went (college, work, etc.), they would be meeting new people. The first impression that they would make on their new acquaintances was important to them. They were finally able to escape their high school reputations and become the person they always wanted to be.

Some seniors who thought the high school held them back got a chance to better themselves.

One senior said, "I think it is easier to do what you want to do in college."

In the business world as well as in college, it was easier to do what a person wanted. Most looked forward to graduation and what came afterward.

Linda Sanford as Nedlam with a new costume donated by the class of 1987, cheered on the football team at the game against Somerville.

NEDLAM, the school mascot, looks better than in past years thanks to the class of '87. The lion, animated by a senior at football games, has been boosting morale for over 25 years. The name originated from spelling "Malden" backwards. NEDLAM was originally gold, but this past NEDLAM was blue. The new NEDLAM is gold again, replacing the old "icky blue NEDLAM" of former years, as described by junior class advisor Jim O'Connell.

The juniors had mixed opinions about the new mascot.

"I think he's great," said Elaine Hanifan. "The bright colors and everything will really pep up the school."

"He's cute," said Kate Maloney. "It's really nice that our class was able to give something to the school."

Stephen Chopelas, however, disagrees.

"They should have kept it all blue. The yellow makes it look dirty faster. And the mane stinks."

Jeff Reddington said nothing but, "The name's dumb."

The general consensus appears to be that, while vaguely disappointing, this new NEWLAM certainly beats the previous one. Basically, they're satisfied. As summed up by one anonymous interviewee, "Hey. A stuffed animal is a stuffed animal."

When school opened this year, the third and fourth floors of A building were swarming with a new breed of student. These students had already endured two years of being looked down upon by older students and teachers. But all the problems and insults that they had had to put up with earned them the right to call themselves upperclassmen. They were not yet seniors, but one step closer.

Some experienced the feeling of what it was like to finally be a junior right away, like when they carried on a mature conversation while walking down the hall with a teacher they knew. Others didn't realize their status until they walked by a group of freshmen.

Juniors soon discovered that, besides the seniors, there was no one left to impress except themselves. Before, when they were sophomores and freshmen, they were self-conscious about what they wore. They had the upperclassmen to impress. Now they were freer to express their individuality. It was their turn to become the trendsetters. Walking through areas where the junior lockers are located, one couldn't help noticing the different groups of people and how they were dressed. Everyone had their own interpretation of the current style.

Juniors Jim Hennessey, Leanne Russell, Kate Dickie and David Nagle take advantage of a break in a LIT meeting to finish some work.

the busy season

As the students progressed through the high school, they took on more and more responsibilities and activities. These students found junior year to be not only the hardest, but the busiest year as well.

The busy season actually began at the end of the sophomore year, when students had to pick classes for the upcoming year. As junior year approached, they realized that they had to start planning for the future.

There is also a lot of pressure in the junior year, as it is this year which is considered to be most important by colleges and universities. They started paying more attention to the college-oriented conversations going on around them, and tried to become familiar with some of the things that were going to be required of them.

An activity which kept many of the juniors busy was Junior Varieties. Work began on this project at the end of October and continued throughout the year until the performance in March. Although this was enjoyable involvement with the class, it still required a lot of work and cooperation. Those involved with sports found the daily practices a bit trying. Part-time employment took up a lot of time, as well as learning to drive. Junior year is when most of these things are going on, in addition to being the year in which one becomes eligible for such things as National Honor Society.

These things may not seem to be too difficult to handle, but when combined all at once (which is what many juniors attempted to do), it is considered to be the busiest year of school.

on being lowly

When the freshmen returned in September to start the new year as sophomores, they had a certain air of confidence about them. They felt that after a year of being teased and harassed as freshmen, they now "knew the ropes" and thought that they could handle anything.

Actually, the term "sophomore" is a derivative from the Latin, meaning "wise fool". This had a funny way of being true, as many sophomores thought that they were being wise when they were really making fools out of themselves and falling on their faces. The sophomores also felt that, since they were in the school the year before, they would know their way around perfectly. This, however, proved to be false because, although they had a better sense of direction than they had had previously, it was still necessary for them to search a little for their newly assigned classes.

By sophomore year, most of the students felt that they had established a place for themselves in the halls of Malden High. This was about the time when they found that, even though they had taken a small step up the high school ladder, they still had two "superior" classes to deal with. Many of these students stated that they felt more comfortable with their scholastic surroundings than they had been previously. Unfortunately, however, this way of thinking often resulted in a situation of too much confidence. This was the reason for the "wise fool" situations our sophomore pals often found themselves in. Although this may have made them feel they were still lowly, in their hearts they "knew" they were the greatest.

They had survived their first year of high school. No more did they hold the title of "freshmen"—they were past that stage. They weren't the lowest of the low or scum on the bottom of a shoe anymore, but they weren't upperclassmen yet either. One could sort of say that they were in the "larval" stage. (This is no to imply that they were insects.) They were the sophomore class.

When they came to the high school a year ago, their heads were filled with different ideas of what it would be like. Now that they had gotten used to they high school, they knew what to expect from the students as well as the teachers.

Being a sophomore did have its few advantages. They weren't picked on as much by older students anymore. In fact, they were the ones who had the privilege of hassling the new freshmen. It gave them a temporary feeling of superiority.

Another advantage to being a sophomore was that they knew more people after one year in high school. Sophomore John Nimblett said, "It's better because more people say 'Hi' to you when you are walking through the halls."

After getting to know more of their classmates, sophomores weren't as shy about getting involved in class activities and helping out. The activities took on a new meaning. Sophomores were working more toward raising money for their class and helping people, rather than considering their events to be social gatherings, as they had in the past. They realized that if they wanted to have more of these activities, they would have to start getting down to business.

Lynne Sheridan, Robyn Bluestein, and Shelly Bailey wait for someone (anyone) to buy a ticket to a Sophomore run dance.

Every year something changes in how the school is run. A major change which occurred was in how the lunch room was operated. Instead of having three lunches with a combination of all grades, there were just two lunches. The first lunch consisted, theoretically, of no one but freshmen and sophomores, while the second of only juniors and seniors.

Let's consider the sophomores in this situation. They were in the school one year with the three-lunch, any-grade system but, returning for the second year, they're forced to eat lunch with the freshmen. And all this after thinking they were finally moving up in the high school world.

Because this was the most social part of the day, most sophomores had an opinion on it. Most of them felt offended that they had to eat lunch with the freshmen, as they had made some friends among the upperclassmen. They therefore resented this new policy.

A lot of sophomores liked (or didn't mind) the change, as most of their friends were sophomores also, and this new method insured their being able to eat with them, whereas the old one did not. They also felt that they had more time during lunch with the slightly longer periods.

Some of the more mature sophomores thought that the new system wasn't very good because it prevented the different classes from getting to know each other, as well as disrupting the fifth period classes with added bells and students roaming the hallways.

Oh, well. To all you dissatisfied sophomores; just remember—there's always next year. Meanwhile, Bon appetit!

food fantasies

Entering High School for the first time was a big step for the freshmen. As ninth graders, they were introduced to new things that were difficult to get used to.

One part of the school day which was really different was lunch. First of all, none of the freshmen were used to going to lunch after class by themselves, without having to wait for some teacher to bring them down. They also enjoyed sitting with friends where they wanted, instead of being told where to sit and separated by classes. This and the fact that there was a place to smoke without getting into trouble gave reason enough for them to start enjoying their free time. The choices between two cafeterias and the choice of going outside was liked by many. Many students also agreed to eat more school lunches daily as they were given a choice of what to eat for the first time. The best support came from the junk food eaters, as there was a whole section of the kitchen devoted to junk food.

Except that they thought the lines were longer than in other schools or just less organized, most freshmen stated that they enjoyed lunch much more. This is a plus, as one does not want to imagine a school full of students who hate lunch and don't want to eat.

Before they got used to a new school, Freshmen Heather McDonald and Donna Cadigan found themselves lost many times.

This September, a new group of students arrived on the steps of Malden High. They were unfamiliar with the set-up and their new surroundings. They were considered to be "the lowest of the low" by the upperclassmen. They were the freshman class.

Fear and anxiety filled most of the incoming freshmen. Many entered the High School with false hopes. They believed that, being at the high school they would be as popular as they were previously. This is to be expected since the freshmen are just coming from the junior highs where they "ruled" the school. The freshmen's expectation of this "honored position" is quickly shot down by the upperclassmen. Even the sophomores add to the "ranking" on of freshmen, in retaliation for what they had experienced as freshmen the previous year. As if this were not enough, the size of the High School also posed a threat to the freshmen. Our school now consists of three large buildings, each containing four floors. This can prove to be truly confusing to the young class and tend to make them feel so very small. The freshman year may seem like an eternity with all of the freshman jokes but, don't worry; you will all be repaid for the long, difficult years of torture you have undergone. Believe it or not, senior year is not that far away.

out on your own

Remember this situation: you were a freshman and had just sat down in class, when you saw two or three people saunter into the classroom. They seemed to have an air of superiority about them that made you wonder why.

Those people were the tenth, eleventh, and even twelfth graders that had been mixed in with a mostly freshman class.

There were different reactions from the freshmen about their older classmates. At first, some were intimidated by them, thought that they had to talk or act older.

Other people who had older friends in their class thought it was great. It looked impressive to other students to be seen talking with an upperclassman. It even gave some students the opportunity to get into one of the "in" crowds.

Then there were the freshmen that weren't phased either way by the presence of a "superior" person in their classroom. These people couldn't care less. As far as they were concerned, they were there to learn.

a man for others

For almost forty years Lou Ciarfella was a part of Malden High as a student, coach, director of night school, and teacher. For many he seemed to be the very soul of the school.

The public statements made on his death were instructive. They tended to focus on the "Pride and Spirit" Awards he had invented. Instinctively people knew that those awards were his response to the darkest days of Prop 2½. Yet, characteristically he never articulated the idea that they were his response to the faculty's shattered morale. The identities of these who received the awards were also revealing. They were a cross section of the school. They showed his global view and his insight into what was happening. Even the text of the award says something of the man. They were given anonymously in the name of a non-existent "Pride and Spirit Committee". Lou Ciarfella's name does not appear anywhere on the certificate or on the award itself.

When he died the usual things were said about his impact on generations of students. This is the kind of things always said of teachers. But this man belonged in a special way, to the faculty. To then his death is a hurt that will not soon be healed.

The facts are simple enough. He was almost always kind. He was humble. He had a sense of humor. He spent his days doing things for other people. The ancient Greeks would have thought him a "naturally good" man. In the ideal of Saint Ignatius he was "a man for others."

is predictable good?

In 1981 hundreds of teachers from all levels were given their pink slips due to Proposition 2½. The teachers were forced to leave their jobs, students, and friends. This not only hurt the teachers, but also led to a decline in the field of education.

The effects that 2½ had on individuals varied throughout the school system. Some teachers were transferred from their original locations to new schools. The unfamiliarity with the students and surroundings brought about mixed feelings from these teachers.

Almost five years later, the teachers have now developed a sense of permanence. They no longer have to live with the fear that they will be "next in line" for layoffs.

Although the stability of their jobs was no longer in question, there was some concern as to the quality of teaching. Some people feared that, due to the lack of college students choosing teaching as their profession, no new ideas were being brought into the schools. For example, most students with math or science degrees chose to go into the business field instead of teaching. This was partly because of the money, and partly because some graduates thought it degrading to waste their degrees on teenagers.

"Big business" didn't lure all college students. With the hope that they could upgrade the system, some chose teaching as a career. Science teacher Ms. Avis Leabman stated, "I think a good teacher, whether first year or fifteenth year, is going to be current and bring new ideas into the classroom."

A recent court decision forced parochial school students to come to the High School for servicing by Title I teacher Trudy LaSpina.

future of the profession

There has been a decline in past years of people entering the field of education. Teachers are not paid their worth, get little respect for the community, and even less respect from the students. Some teachers were even advising students to forget about a career in education, as they felt it just wasn't worth it. Bearing all of this in mind, what kind of future is there for the teaching profession?

Mel Blackman, director of the music department, thought things looked pretty grim in Malden.

"Malden has become much more industrialized," said Blackman. "Families are moving out of Malden, so there aren't as many school-age kids."

Barbara LaPorta felt that, if we hope to have anyone around to teach our children, some big changes will have to be made.

"It's not only an economic problem," she said. "It's more of a social thing. The solution will have to begin at home, with parents teaching their children respect—for education and educators."

Unfortunately, this aspect of the problem is very difficult to solve, as it is up to the individual how his children are brought up. But there are things that can be done to encourage people to enter the profession. Funding can be provided for better programs. Teachers can start receiving the salaries they deserve. And, perhaps most importantly, the school administrations can insure that students behave in class, regardless of what they do at home or anywhere else.

things never to ask

Many of the teachers seem to have accumulated a subconscious list of questions that they have simply learned not to ask. These questions appear to fall into distinct categories. First, we have the set-up question.

John O'Brien has learned not to ask set-up questions like "Would you really rather listen to that Walkman than to me?"

Another type of question asks for an explanation, such as "Why are you late?"

"The answer to that question," said Thomas O'Donnell, "makes things far more confusing and wastes so much time . . . Now I just ask if they have a slip, which only has two possible answers.

Then there are questions which are usually only a problem when directed to freshmen. Questions like "What teacher sent you?" occasionally elicit answers like, "That guy up there" or "you know, the woman in the other room", because they frequently don't know the names of their teachers.

"One of my favorite questions," said Robert Snow, "used to be Why are you constantly trying to be the wit of your class when you are constantly only half-succeeding.?"

When it was confusedly inquired of him why he had to stop asking that particular question, with a look of extreme patience and a note of frustration in his voice, he replied, "Because they didn't get it."

But when asked in all seriousness, Gerald Alleyne sums up the real feelings of the teachers, saying "I'll ask. I reserve that right and privilege, as a Malden High School educator, to ask."

National Honor Society members looked on as children from the YWCA bobbed for apples at their Halloween Party.

where it all happened

The city of Malden is located in a specific region, known to the phone company as "North Suburban Boston" and known to just about everybody else as "suburbia". The type of person who enjoys living in this area (referred to by the dissatisfied counterpart as a "burbyite") presumably lives in only one of the cities in this region, and assumedly had a good reason for choosing this city over another. What makes Malden different from the surrounding cities?

Senior Michael Schlager said, "Well, in a way Malden is the whole idea of the melting pot. It has all these different ethnic groups in it, unlike the neighboring communities which consist mostly of one dominant group."

Senior Patty Jensen also chose to express Malden in terms of other cities.

"Malden is Everett with trees", said Patty. "That's all it is."

"It's like a training ground," added Dawn Powers, also a senior. "Then people move on to better things."

Many students felt, however, that one of the best things about Malden for them at the moment was that the high school is right near the square, not in the middle of nowhere like it seems to be in most cities. Situated where it is, it was possible for a student to do something after school without using up all the time just getting there.

But senior Karen Silliker probably expressed all our secret feelings when she said, "What makes Malden special? It has me in it."

an old formula, the real thing

What a year. Filled with triumphs—and disappointments. The personal trials we went through and the obstacles we've overcome have made us stronger and wiser. The things we've learned throughout our stay here have prepared us to face the outside world and tackle it head-on. We've gone through so much in such a short time.

Out high school years were the most emotional of our lives. Everything affected us more strongly, so that both the highs and lows seemed more intense. Everything was magnified in importance, and every situation was critical.

Meanwhile, when we were all busy trying to sort out our emotional problems, we were faced with the responsibilities of school. We had more obligations than ever before in our lives—and just as many valid reasons not to fulfill them. School became a sideline, a part from the main business of our lives. Things like homework and tests became secondary to our busy social schedules.

And now, what's left? Memories and a yearbook. Perhaps a few snapshots, an old notebook, a few stray copies of the Blue and Gold. From these remnants, with the help from old friends, we must piece together an important portion of our lives.

But that's all we'll need. When it comes time to move on, we won't feel that we have to spend that much time on years past. We'll take the things we've learned here and use them as a foundation. We will build on them, and create a solid future.

We wish to thank faculty members Claire DeVito and Elliot Carlson for all their help. Thanks also to Mike Dasho and the staff of Lincoln Studios. Similarly we are grateful to Paul Leahy and John Novak of the Malden News for their many kindnesses.

Thanks are due to our families for understanding the erratic demands of yearbook life.

Also, we wish to thank sophomore Michael Bergen for drawing the "Original Formula" logo.

The co-editors especially thank the staff. They made it all work.
